Seasonal influenza: use of antivirals 2024-25

The IPCT have seen a significant rise of Influenza cases within our hospitals. This is in line with recent intelligence provided by Public Health Scotland (PHS) of increases in laboratory-confirmed influenza incidence, and test positivity in general practices (GPs) now suggests sustained community-level influenza transmission in Scotland.

PHS also has confirmed increases in hospitalisations due to influenza. Based on PHS's intelligence, it is a reminder that antiviral medicines (specifically oseltamivir and zanamivir) can be prescribed to treat influenza where clinically indicated, and in particular, among those vulnerable to severe disease or presenting with severe infection/symptoms.

Antiviral use may help to prevent infection following exposure and, amongst those with infection, to lessen symptoms, shorten the period of illness and reduce the risk of complications.
